All Things Open Conference Brings Top Open Technology Experts in World To Raleigh

Event to feature nearly every leading company in the U.S.

Raleigh, NC, September 9, 2014 - The world's top developers, technologists and decision makers will gather on October 22-23 in Raleigh, NC for the second annual All Things Open conference, presented by IT-oLogy and OpenSource.com. Two days of keynotes, talks, tutorials and networking opportunities will be presented on the most important topics in open source, open tech, and the open web in the enterprise. More than 90% of all companies use open source and open technology.

The 2013 event was attended by more than 750 people from 25 states and 3 countries. More than 1,000 are expected in 2014, including nearly every leading technology company in the U.S. Just a few of those companies include Red Hat, Facebook, PayPal, Docker, Twitter, GitHub, Cisco, Mirantis, Adobe, Qualcomm, IBM, Elasticsearch, Mozilla, Hewlett Packard, Cloudera, Citrix, Microsoft, MongoDB, Oracle, Acquia, Chef, Sonatype, Samsung, Mulesoft, Bitly, Percona, and many, many more.

Some of the best and most well known thought leaders in the open source/tech/web industries will attend and speak. Wednesday, October 22 will feature keynotes and talks by Dwight Merriman, co-founder MongoDB & DoubleClick; Doug Cutting, creator of Hadoop, Lucene and other extremely popular technologies; Bob Young, founder of Lulu.com & co-founder of Red Hat; Estelle Weyl, O'Reilly author and well known trainer and developer; Hampton Catlin, creator of the Sass and Haml languages; Dr. Angel Diaz, co-author of many of today's WWW standards; and Jeffrey Hammond, VP & Principle Analyst at Forrester. Thursday, October 23 will feature James Pearce, Head of Open Source at Facebook; Yehuda Katz, core team member of Rails, Ember.JS and jQuery and well known author; Ross Mason, co-founder of Mulesoft and founder of the Mule Project; Chris Aniszyzyk, Head of Open Source at Twitter; DeLisa Alexander, Executive VP & Chief People Officer at Red Hat; and many others.

"We expect 1,000 attendees and participants at this year's event," said conference organizer, Todd Lewis. "We are extremely pleased to be working closely with the Raleigh and Research Triangle communities as this region leads the way in the "open" space. Obviously, open source plays a huge role in many companies in the area and throughout the world – it seems only fitting the best in the world are taking part. We couldn't be happier to host them."

Some of the most relevant and in demand technologies will be discussed. Whether you're a developer, programmer, scientist, data or system administrator, CIO, CTO, IT manager, or just someone interested in what's coming next, you'll find sessions for you.
